About Us

BMMHC

The Black Men's Mental Health Conference was established to draw attention to the state of mental well-being among African-Americans. Our priority is to focus on the unique needs of black men and their psychological health. Research and clinical data suggest that the mental health of black men is more intricate and sensitive than that of other ethnic populations. Due to structural racism and the particular experiences of black men in this country, their mental health and treatments are intimately intertwined.

The goal of the Black Men's Mental Health Conference is to bring attention to mental health crisis in the black community. It is our hope to create a supportive setting in which Black men can openly discuss their mental health concerns, acquire information and resources, and engage in meaningful dialogues while forming a unified network that raises awareness of domestic violence and mental health in the Black community. We strongly believe that by uniting in fellowship, unity, and love, we can create a safe harbor for Black men to share their experiences and collectively work together towards a brighter future.

Meet Our Founders

justUs

Camillia Harris with justUs has crafted a strategic approach to bring awareness to mental health issues that lie dormant and go unrecognized. After losing her father to suicide, she is determined to remove the band-aids of trauma, pain, and unmet mental health needs. Harris states, "We must have discussions around intervention and preventative measures (THAT WORK). We must ignite trust back into our communities, within our physicians, and in our very own households. We must hold each other accountable for helping someone in need. We can't look the other way anymore".

Liv Out Loud

Diona Clark of Liv Out Loud has a mission to help raise awareness surrounding Domestic and Gun Violence in the community through education, empowerment, and prevention. Liv Out Loud is on the move to impact the lives of those that may have searched for alternatives after experiencing trauma. She wants to make and be the difference to anyone that is willing to take part in the Liv Out Loud experience.

About The Conference

The Black Men's Mental Health Conference is hosting its first conference brought to you by Liv Out Loud and justUs. The BMMHC was created to provide a platform designed to identify specific tools, resources, and networks that support Black Men and their mental health journeys. Disparities in mental health treatment have caused significantly higher levels of drug abuse, suicide, and domestic violence in communities comprised of people of color.

Our 1st conference date is April 15, 2023, in Dayton, Oh. The BMMHC will host a panel of men with careers ranging from sports to psychiatry. Over the course of four hours, 200+ Black men from all over the world will come together to gain knowledge and discover methods for coping with trauma and/or unmet needs related to their mental health.
